

Robin LoRe for GlowPinkOn.com

March 1, 2018

1878 Words

Product Review of Tatcha Rice Enzyme Powder

Headline: This Powder is no Puff

Subheadline: Get Radiant With Tatcha's Powder Cleanser

This amazing powder to foam cleanser is meant to be your second step in Tatcha's ritual of products which starts with Camilla Cleansing Oil---also fantastic. I had originally ordered the ritual set for dry skin, but immediately got hooked on this product, for a few really good reasons:

- Reason One: It's a non-leaky, not messy, travel anywhere, soft powder that turns into a creamy foam when added to water in your palm.
- Reason Two: It's a magic exfoliator that removes dead skin that dulls your complexion. You don't know exactly how it's getting your skin all glowy, because there's no beads or rough, gritty bits, but by some secret, magical method, it strips off the bad stuff while leaving behind the good stuff, like your dermis.

- Reason Three: It's non-drying. I did use the dry skin formula, so I asked a friend to test the oily skin flavor, and she said "Nothing but baby skin here!"
- Reason Four: It lasts a good long time. I used mine daily for about a month before running out. It's a little high priced for a writer, but it is a high-end luxury product, so the price is on point with other lines of this caliber.
- Reason Five: It's not irritating. I find that many exfoliators eventually give me some kind of bumps or rash, but this one did not. It cleaned my skin and made it soft. Simple.

What's in the ritual, you may ask? There are four products in Tatcha's skin care program. They vary by skin type but they are designed to work together to give you your best possible skin.